Daily Rhythm

How to shape your day so that morning, afternoon and evening all make sense. Twelve simple habits. No miracles, no expensive gadgets.

MORNING AFTERNOON EVENING

MORNING

Mornings set the whole day.

Your body runs on an internal clock. In the morning, you tell it the day has begun.

1

Daylight within half an hour

Open a window or step outside, even when it's cloudy. There's far more light outdoors than under a lamp.

2

A glass of water before coffee

After a night without a drink, it's the easiest first step. Enjoy your coffee, just not instead of breakfast.

3

Breakfast with protein

Eggs, quark, yoghurt or a bean spread. A sweet pastry on its own won't keep you going for long.

4

Wake up at the same time

Even at weekends, no more than an hour later. For your internal clock, regularity matters more than the length of one night.

> Why mornings: miss the daylight and breakfast, and you often spend the rest of the day catching up on caffeine and sugar. A tidy morning costs less than afternoon patch-ups.

AFTERNOON

The afternoon makes or breaks the day.

After lunch comes a natural dip. You can't switch it off, but you don't have to add fuel to the fire.

5 A lunch you can work after

Half a plate of vegetables, a quarter protein, a quarter sides. Overeating is the surest way to feel sleepy.

6 Ten minutes' walk after eating

Head outside, take the stairs, take a call standing up. A short move after lunch does more than another coffee.

7 Last coffee by 2 pm

Caffeine stays in your body for a long time. An afternoon espresso can still make itself felt at bedtime.

8 Water on your desk, not in the kitchen

A bottle within reach gets drunk. A glass in the kitchen waits until evening.

> Tip: book a five-minute afternoon break in your calendar like a meeting. No one else will see it, but you will.

EVENING

Evenings close the day.

Sleep doesn't start in bed. It starts two hours before.

9 Dinner two to three hours before bed

Lighter than lunch. Falling asleep is harder on a full stomach.

10 An hour without screens

Phone out of the bedroom, charger in the living room. A book, a shower, a stretch, anything without notifications.

11 A cooler bedroom

Around 18 to 19 °C, dark and quiet. Air the room while you brush your teeth.

12 Empty your head onto paper

Write three things for tomorrow on a note. What's on paper doesn't need repeating at night.

> Adults usually need 7 to 9 hours of sleep. At least 150 minutes of activity a week, even split into walks, is part of the WHO recommendations.

A ONE-WEEK TRIAL

Tick off seven days.

You don't need all twelve. Pick three habits, one for each part of the day, and track them for a week.
